Re: Physiomed Hivamat 200

I purchased a Hivamat 200 unit several years ago and have used it extensively in my chiropractic practice since. Previous to that purchase I had very little use for electrical modalities in my practice. I used hands-on muscle work on most patients in the nature of muscle stripping with deep tissue massage and myofascial release. While I had excellent results with those methods, I was confronted more and more often with elderly patients or accident victims that were either too old or too sore to sustain deep muscle work. Or, if they could tolerate the treatment itself, they were often sore for several days following treatment. Either way, I was looking for an alternative.

When the US Physiomed rep. came into my office one Friday morning and started telling me how wonderful the Hivamat 200 is, I thought to myself "this is too good to be true" and almost dismissed him entirely. However, with great luck, a current patient of mine whom I'd been treating for approximately two months for radicular pain caused by a disc bulge at L4 came into the office inquiring about another matter. I suggested to the rep. that if the Hivamat was so good, he could treat my patient with it and see what happens. In jest I even made the statement that "if it works on him, I'll buy one." Well, the Hivamat not only worked on my patient, he was able to work and go about his normal life for almost ten days without pain. Needless to say, I was amazed and impressed. I purchased a unit the following week and have never regretted the purchase in any way.

My practice has grown substantially and there is virtually no one that I can not treat and improve upon their health status. I have used the Hivamat with great success in absolutely every health issue with one exception. Although I understand that the Hivamat is a good treatment for bursitis, I have had no luck with that one ailment. However, I have successfully used this treatment on impacted sinus patients, lymphatic related patients, post-surgeries and general muscle pain caused by fibromyalgia. Many of my elderly patients are too old to be adjusted manually but respond extremely well to the Hivamat. Universally, everyone loves the treatment itself.

I have absolutely nothing negative to say about this wonderful product. I never would have thought that I would be using any electrical modality in my practice, I but I love the Hivamat and continue to be amazed at the results I achieve for my patients. I only wish I had discovered it sooner.

Sincerely,
Vicki A. Cunningham, D.C.
